

Abstract

The present invention provides a process for treating living fish having an improved meat quality or an elongated period of 5 tasting time, or providing internal organs having an improved quality. According to the present invention, living fish is kept alive in an aqueous alkali solution and then washed with water or neutralized.